Drama

originated with a skeletal script which was embellished and fattened by the student's own additions and creations. Minimal stage equipment was still all that was necessary as the performers highlighted the stage.

The primary colors of blue, green, yellow and red dominated the stage once again last Wednesday night when the Drama Workshop was invited to Ipswich High School to perform Story Theatre in conjunction with Ipswich's winning version of the comedy The Chinaman.

The Cohasset students were embraced by the Ipswich students in a show of hospitality and comradery as they shared not only the dramatic limelight but also accommodations and the bus ride to Vermont.

In Vermont, the Drama Workshop performed Friday afternoon along with two other schools. Emmons said the judges opened critiques right after the three performances in front of the audience and didn't mince words. Cohasset received two excellent and one very good.

Because the festival wasn't competitive the reactions of the students were different than before, Emmons said, because they were walking away with palpable trophies or titles this time. However, he considered the festival a tremendous success and commented, "We saw all kinds of theater. The kids participated in a lot of workshops. Fencing and makeup were the most popular. I thought it was very well done."

After an exhausting three-day weekend, the Drama Workshop is home for good now, this year's round of drama showcases are over. They are considering the possibility of committing Story Theatre to film; but aside from that, Story Theatre will finally be laid to rest.

The cast members include: Cathleen Collins, Beth Donahue, Meri Fink, Jon Foell, David Hanlon, Scott Muir, Lisa O'Toole, Disa Pratt, Judy Venderlugt, Jim Vivian, Jerry White. Stage manager is Arthur Glasfeld, stage crew include Kerry Crehan, Susanna Mastrobuono, Bob Durant and in charge of lighting Leslie Collins.
